INVITATION

The University of Johannesburg's Institute for the Future of Knowledge and the Library will hold a three-part hybrid seminar series on Democratising Knowledge: The Politics and Economics of Knowledge Production and Consumption.

This series delves into the dynamic landscape of knowledge accessibility, exploring the intricate interplay between politics, economics, and knowledge production and consumption. The seminars will address the challenges researchers, academics, and students in Africa and the Global South encounter when accessing scholarly journals, analysing the underlying barriers and proposing inclusive solutions to foster a more equitable research landscape.

PART 1: Barriers to Accessing Journals in Africa and the Global South (1 August; 17:00-18:30)

PART 2: Racial Inequalities in Journals (8 August; 12:00-13:30)

PART 3: Lessons from the Peer Community in (PCI) (15 August; 17:00-18:30)
